Attorney for Defendant

Plaintiff filed a Motion for Reconsideration on 8/16/24. The Court reviewed the Motion and Affidavit. The Plaintiff attached numerous documents, including letters to the Court. Those documents were not submitted at trial, and thus should be stricken from the file. The Court is aware that the Plaintiff is representing himself, however, he still needs to comply with the law and the Court Rules. Plaintiff has repeatedly violated the court rules, yet continues to blame the Court for his own actions. This is the tenth motion that the Plaintiff has filed since the case began in April, in addition to having filed an ERPA case against the Defendant.

The Plaintiff's Motion is confusing, and does not comport with the Court rules. However, the Court will respond as appropriate. The Court provided findings on the record regarding the established custodial environment and each best interest factor. Plaintiff's assertions that the Court did not, is incorrect. The Court provided findings regarding parenting time. The Plaintiff's assertions that no evidence was presented is also false, as the Defendant had several witnesses and exhibits.

In his Motion, the Plaintiff does not address any of the evidence that was introduced at trial, and does not dispute with any specificity, the evidence that Defendant presented. Contrary to the Plaintiff's assertions, the Plaintiff did not have stable housing or income at the time of trial. The Plaintiff appears to be trying to change his circumstances, but the facts at the time of trial, are the facts the court utilized.

Further, any evidence should have been presented at the trial. Plaintiff has repeatedly tried to just "send in documents." The Court, again, cannot review these documents. The Plaintiff has repeatedly been told this. The Plaintiff has been informed multiple times, that the Court cannot provide legal advice, and that he would have to hire an attorney or review the legal help website.

The purpose of a trial was for both parties to present ALL of their evidence, and have the opportunity to cross examine any witnesses. A trial was held. Despite the Plaintiff's assertions, he had
